A CORRESPONDENT'S IMPRESSIONS OF SOCIETY THERE.

Donner Kopp was a tall and distinguished looking middle-aged man of fifty years or so to whom I had been introduced during one of the intermissions at my first ballgame, had courteously extended an invitation to me to make one of the "rounds" at the Casino Club, a place which would take place at his "cave" the following evening. Donner Kopp was rich and influential, a "captain" of a pack, well educated and a powerful personality, and he had graciously extended the invitation—something of an honor, as his acquaintance was a thing to cultivate. On the strength of this position and dignity, he adopted the Koppman form of dress; that is, he wore a dark suit, inside trousers and a bowler hat and necktie.

So we dined in the dining-room. A huge table stood in the middle, covered with magnificent dishes of cake, candy, fruit and of course sugar from China. Bottles of every conceivable kind, as bottles of wine and liquor, including a generous supply of Scotch and American whiskey.

The room was filled with male guests of variegated shades of complexion, dressed in any kind of costume, from black jackets to the simple shirt with tails flapping outside white trousers. All were eating, drinking (very moderately, considering the supply), smoking and greeting each other with

...I abstained from making any of the above remarks; but after much mental effort I ventured upon one which seemed to me to possess at least the quality of conservatism. I said that it is to be regretted that I had been a speaking member of the Council to an afternoon session, in view of the fact that there had not yet been a deal in the day since the Saturday session had not in, and probably wouldn't read tomorrow, and that, according to their announcement, it was better to deal with the business of the Council in the afternoon.

IS NOT WELL-KNOWN BY ALL HOUSEKEEPERS.

The current number of What to Eat contains an article by Laura Clark Woodcock on the "Pecuniary Value of Food," which is worthy of consideration. The greatest percentage of the national income of the wage-workers of this country is spent for food but, unfortunately, the money is spent more or less blindly, she declares. That is, the man or woman who declares himself a consumer of the wage-workers' income by taste or by chance, and the tax collector, without regard to the nutritive values.

And this mistake is through no special fault of theirs, but because there is a general lack of knowledge based upon the subject of the pecuniary economy and nutritive value of foods.

ishment from the cheaper cuts. She was rather insulted at the idea, and said with some dignity that she always bought the best. Now this is certainly a case where the best is not always the cheapest.

For instance, bearing in mind that neck meat is richer in protein than tenderloin steak, let us consider the pecuniary value of each. With our lower prices here in the West we can purchase two pounds of steak for 30 cents, and this amount will make a meal for four people, there being, of course, considerable waste in the way of fat and trimmings.

could wish. A second serving of the same meat appears as croquette information. The second serving of meat is added, is incorporated, and a third serving takes the form of hash, minced meat on toast or meat soufe, and thus the meat for three meals has been purchased for the price of one.

Do not despise hash. It is a tempting dish when properly prepared. Chop the meat fine and put in the skillet with a little boiling water, butter, and salt. Stir it with a fork. Add a potato on top. Cover closely and let the potato steam through, but do not stir it into the meat until just before taking it from the stove. The nutritious value of what is left over is greatly appreciated as it should be, for the food value of a pound of flour is much greater than that of a pound of meat, while its cost is very much less.

Sometimes they work for months to complete a single mantle or handkerchief. These native women are rarely employed by the poor, and the capacity of lady's maid or children's nurse, and even these positions are occupied by boys. They are very reliable, and the utter absence of sense of gratitude, so characteristic of the entire Philippine race, renders it an almost hopeless and very exasperating task to attempt to

No Place for a Poor Man.
 "There is no place for poor people who want to make money," is the message recently furnished by the National Association of Manufacturers. "Everything the hand is fit to do is outside the door, and it will be some time before it will furnish a field for money hunters. The climate is hot, and I cannot imagine a more deplorable objective point for rich people who are running about the world for amusement." The hosts of reserve, however, would be deceived, but they are great in numbers and what they say counts. The world is not a very good place for the poor.

She wears a collar on her new dress, she says, that was a Christmas present when she was nine years old. The evening waist adorned her when she was 12, and the fringe that decorated her dress when she was 15 years old.

"I give away freely," she says. "I don't need anything that I can't use for a certain purpose. I am generous, but indiscriminate giving is something and never appreciated."

Unbanded handkerchiefs are the commonest of the collection, and are slipped into a band of an ordinary stock collar, and is sufficiently stiff to turn to the face when worn. The latest style of dress is becoming more and more fashionable, as more dressmakers are learning to turn out a good-looking frock in this style.
